

Our children are besieged by violence in daily life. Cartoons and Disney movies are full of adult innuendos. However, I do not choose for legislators to use their definition of indecent, "merely refers to nonconformance with accepted standards of morality". My husband and I need to be the ones defining what is morale for our children. There is an easy solution for reducing the violence viewed by children, it is turning the television off. It is switching the radio station when foul language is used or putting in CDs. Because we are the land of the free, it is essential that the FCC not determine what our children see, but that we as parents hold the ultimate key in leading by example to our children.
